HELP! HELP!

It has been pointed out that the exhibitors at the shows could be a great help to the clerks who send out the ribbons after the show is all over. The entry clerks could help a great deal too.

After the show is all over and some kind member takes the entry tags and ribbons home to sort before mailing they find that some tags only have a number. Perhaps the exhibitor is too ashamed of the bloom to write down their name and address. Now how do these ribbons get delivered? The entry books have to be dug out of a box someplace and the address checked.

It would seem that if an exhibitor thinks enough of a bloom to enter they should take the time to list their name and address along with their entry number. It would be a great help to the show officials. Also the public would like to know who brought in these blooms.

The exhibitor can help by listing his name and address and entry number. The entry clerks can help by asking each exhibitor to do this when the entry number is assigned.

There are two easy ways to do this. One is to buy a rubber stamp with your name and address. Another is to purchase the little gummed labels with your name and address. These two ways would enable one to do this job quickly.

Would ya help, please, huh?
